

EDITORIAL DISCUSSION – BEST PRACTICE

The "Weekly Editorial Discussions" program significantly enhances law students' analytical and critical thinking skills, essential for their legal education. By engaging with editorials from reputable sources on current legal developments and socio-legal issues, students gain a deeper understanding of contemporary legal challenges. The structured weekly discussions foster an environment where students can practice presenting and defending their viewpoints, honing their argumentation and public speaking skills.

Additionally, the active involvement of faculty members ensures that discussions are both rigorous and educational, providing students with constructive feedback that enhances their research, analytical, and presentation abilities. This program not only prepares students for real-world legal practice but also encourages them to stay informed about the latest legal trends and issues, making them more well-rounded and informed legal professionals.
